

Council Awards Tabernacle Bid

3-9-88

The Heber City Council last week accepted Shearson Lehman and Hutton's low bid of 7.4034406 percent interest, a net interest cost of $333,525, for the $350,000 General Obligation Public Building Bonds to finance the construction of the Wasatch Stake Tabernacle. The final payment on the bonds will be repaid in the year 2008.

The project is scheduled to be completed by May 1. It will house city offices, a museum and meeting hall.

A copy of the bond sale contract appears in the Public Notice section.

Fire Engine Money

The council voted unanimously to return the $68,800 Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) funds received last year to purchase a fire engine.

Heber applied this year for $220,000 to improve the sewage collection system in the city limits and extend water and sewer lines south of the city limits, to an area which is expected to request annexation. The council was informed that it would receive $115,833 for the lines if it cancelled the fire engine order. They agreed to cancel the order but not return the funds in case the county fire district failed.

Mayor Gordon Mendenhall recommended the city now return the funds, saying, "I think our community's going to be better off

10, 15, 20 years from now, by improving our water and sewer problems than it's going to be by having a fire engine."

He also reported that mineral lease funds might be available to help complete the project.

Eleanor Duke, recorder, reported that the annexation process must begin within 90 days after the award is granted. The mayor said 90 percent of the property and 75 percent of the landowners are already committed to the annexation.

WHS Auditorium Board

Mayor Mendenhall reported that he had suggested to Dr. Henry Jolley, Superintendent of Schools, that the Wasatch High School Auditorium Board be reactivated and that he agreed. The commission appointed the mayor and Councilman Lincoln Rasband to represent Heber on the board.

"I think we should have a little more to say about what goes on there, particularly as far as public use is concerned," the mayor said. "I don't know whether the public is getting fair consideration or not. Some of the people who have reported back to me, who have used that building, don't feel that they're getting what they should be out of the use of those buildings for public purposes."

He said Dr. Jolley was not previously aware that the city had contributed $60,000 to construct the auditorium.

$27,987,000, to complete two lanes of the 6.4-mile stretch. The Utah Department of Transportation's estimate was $36.8 million.

The first phase of U.S. 40 relocation construction, from Mayflower to the Midway turnoff, began last summer. The second phase will complete the new alignment. However, only two lanes will be paved with asphalt, so that traffic can be diverted from the Reservoir, about 100 feet above water level. There will be an interchange for access to Park City and another to provide access to Mayflower properties and a proposed state park.

Most of the work on the new alignment won't interfere with present traffic on U.S. 40, but may interfere with access to properties near Utah 248, a UDOT spokesman said.
